

Steps in the AZ Involuntary Treatment Process

1. Application for Involuntary Evaluation Any responsible individual over age 18 who has recently witnessed a behavior may submit an application for involuntary evaluation of a person who is alleged to be, as a result of a mental disorder, in danger of hurting themselves or others, and refuses or is unable to receive a voluntary evaluation. The responsible individual submitting an application for involuntary evaluation may be someone such as a family member, case manager, or any other person in the community. The responsible individual must present facts and recent examples of the person's behavior and why they are unable or unwilling to go to treatment without court order. The application for involuntary evaluation is submitted to a health care agency that conducts a pre-petition screening of the allegedly mentally disordered person.

An application for emergency admission may also be filed if the person is an immediate danger to self or others. The application for emergency admission must state the specific nature of the danger and a summary of the observations upon which the statement of danger is based.

2. Screening for Evaluation Within 48 hours of the Application being filed, a behavioral health screening agency meets with the patient to determine if further evaluation is needed. The screening may end if the screening professional determines treatment is not needed, or if the person agrees to voluntary treatment. If it is determined the person may be eligible for involuntary treatment, an Application for Court Ordered Evaluation is filed with the court. If approved, the order is sent to local law enforcement to bring the person to the hospital for evaluation. If the person is an immediate threat to themselves or others, an Emergency Admission may be necessary.

Steps in the AZ Involuntary Treatment Process

3. Court Ordered Evaluation A judge must find reasonable cause to believe the person is in danger of hurting themselves or others, and refuses or is unable to receive a voluntary mental health evaluation. When the order is signed, the court appoints an attorney to represent the patient. Depending on the situation and location, the patient is evaluated in a medical facility or within the community. Within 72 hours of the court order, at least two physicians must meet with the person and conduct an evaluation and may recommend immediate treatment for the person, including medication, but the person maintains the right to refuse treatment during the time of the evaluation.

4. Court Ordered Treatment Hearing Following the physicians' petition for court ordered treatment, the court will schedule a hearing within six working days of the application for court ordered evaluation. In addition to the evidence provided by the evaluating physicians, the original petitioner must present evidence provided by two or more witnesses acquainted with the person at the time of the alleged mental disorder. The proposed patient and legal counsel have the right to be present at the hearing and introduce evidence.

5. Court Order The court will order treatment if there is clear and convincing evidence that the person is in need of treatment and is unwilling or unable to accept treatment voluntarily. The person may be ordered to inpatient treatment at a hospital, or to outpatient treatment in a community based clinic, or a combination of inpatient and outpatient treatment. Treatment may also include provisions such as taking medication prescribed by the provider.

6. Patient Release or Discharge from Treatment The maximum period for court ordered treatment is 365 days. The maximum period for inpatient treatment is up to 90 days for a person found to be a danger to self, up to 180 days for a person found to be dangerous to others or persistently or acutely disabled, and up to 365 days for a gravely disabled person.

This guide provides information on who may initiate proceedings leading to involuntary treatment of a person with a mental health disorder, as well as Arizona's process for court-ordered mental health evaluation and treatment.

MANDATORY TREATMENT LAWS

Each state has civil commitment laws that establish criteria for determining when involuntary treatment is appropriate for individuals with severe mental illness who are not able or willing to get the help they need.

In Arizona, the court may order a patient to undergo inpatient (hospital) or outpatient (community) treatment if there is clear and convincing evidence that a proposed patient, as a result of a mental disorder, is:

- a danger to self, or
- a danger to others, or
- persistently or acutely disabled, or
- gravely disabled and in need of treatment,
- and is either unwilling or unable to accept voluntary treatment.

Arizona's law on court-ordered evaluation and treatment is in Arizona Revised Statutes, Title 36, Sections 504-544. More detailed rules are also in Arizona Administrative Code, Title 9, Chapter 21, Article 5.

The information in this guide does not address persons accused of a crime. Different laws apply for criminal matters.
